MARKET COMMENTARY

Gilles Frisch
Portfolio manager

October was a very volatile month for the high yield markets, registering a +2% rebound from September, lows followed by a further significant correction at the end of the month.

This correction was accompanied by a rebound in rating downgrades, particularly in the B/C/C segment.

For the first time in a while, a divergence was observed between Euro High Yield where spreads widened and US HY where spreads narrowed.

This divergence reflects two factors: rising US rates while Euro rates have fallen and a much larger decrease in the level of risky assets in Europe compared to the US.

The High Yield markets are therefore entering a very uncertain period with a second wave of the virus and a market that has seen worsening liquidity since the end of October.

We strengthened the long BB, the short B and long Financial Services strategies in the portfolio.

We also increased our short on the aerospace industry as the fundamentals of the sector continue to deteriorate, without any signs of improvement.
